replied very promptly and as he has given me leave to show the note to you I now enclose it. There is something manly and candid about it and is just such a letter as I should expect from him. I wish to be his friend, and save him from the toils with which he is surrounded - and as a personal favor to myself let me enlist your sympathies in his behalf. The way this can best be done is to remove him to some other district.

I enclose his letter and please return it to me or destroy it after perusal.

Very faithfully yours,

Hy. T. Clarke
